"Do you have any last words?" The warden said to the inmate.

"I would like to give love to my mother, sisters and brothers" Freddie Webb replied, "and let them know that I am thinking of them right now and I want to thank God for giving me such a loving family. To the victim's family: I hope you will find it in your heart to forgive me as I have forgiven you. I'm ready, Warden."

Webb is one of the 554 people that has been executed in Texas since it became legal again in 1976. His last words are written down in Texas' history book for Texas is one of the only states that keeps public record of last words of inmates.

Every once in a while, you run across a dataset that you cannot walk away from. That is what happened to me when I ran across the Texas death row inmates' last words. There were last words that were spiritual. There were last words that were remorseful. There were last words that were assertions of innocence. And there were some that were silent. My goal is to visualize their last words for you here.
